Abstract This collection contains digital video recordings and e-books relating to the Culture Love 2012 'Stories under Tagai' program on a number of islands in the Torres Strait, Far North Queensland.

Scope and content The program aimed to promote intergenerational literacy during the Easter 2012 school holidays. It saw community Elders sharing traditional stories based around the Tagai legend with local children and was hosted by Indigenous Knowledge Centres (IKCs) on Badu/Mulgrave, Keriri/Hammond, Iama/Yam, Mabuiag/Jervis and Poruma/Coconut Islands, and the Rural Libraries Connect service on Waiben/Thursday Island. The programme reproduced these legends through storytelling, music, dance and art activities such as painting and printmaking.

System of arrangement Arranged into 7 series.

Description 15 digital video recordings (2 hr. 33 min. 9 sec.) :

Administrative / Biographical history Culture Love is a State Library of Queensland program delivered through Indigenous Knowledge Centres (IKCs). The Culture Love program provides opportunities for Indigenous children and young people to revive and celebrate culture through the arts. State Library staff and the IKC coordinator consult with the community to identify the local cultural themes to embed within the Culture Love program. From these consultations State Library staff prepare a draft program which is circulated and once approved support the IKC in the organisation of the program. The IKC then plays a lead role in delivering the program. The Culture Love program was first delivered in 2009. Participants in the program include State Library of Queensland, IKC network, Aboriginal Shire Councils and the Torres Strait Regional Council (who own and manage the IKCs), Arts Queensland, Queensland Health, the Torres Strait Regional Authority and the Office for the Arts, Department of Prime Minister and Cabinet. 'Stories under Tagai' short overview

Unit ID 33034/1

Scope and content

Overview of the Culture Love 2012 'Stories under Tagai' program spoken by State Library of Queensland staff members Victoria Carless and Tyler Wellensiek. Victoria Carless explains that the program was a 3 day Easter holiday school holiday program that took place on Badu/Mulgrave, Poroma/Coconut, Keriri/Hammond, Mabuiag/Jervis, Iama/Yam and Waiben/Thursday Islands in the Torres Strait and centered around the legend of Tagai, a warrior and fisherman who came to be part of a constellation in the sky. Tyler Wellensiek then shares the outcomes of the project that included:

- the creation of digital stories and e-books with illustrations by children guided by local and visiting artists.
- the development of content unique to each community that would be housed in each IKC to become part of their cultural resource collection.
- community celebrations which allowed the children to showcase their creations.

Stories under Tagai : traditional stories from the Torres Strait

Unit ID 33034/8

Scope and content

The video documents Culture Love 2012 'Stories under Tagai' activities on Keriri/Hammond Island:

- singing in a traditional language accompanied by footage of the island.
- elected Elder Josephine David-Petero sharing parts of her life story with children as they are driven about the island in a mini bus by a police officer. The bus stops at various locations important to the story. Josephine also shares her advice for children of today.
- elected Elder Josephine David-Petero assisting children write and illustrate stories.
- arts workers Ceferino Sabatino and John Garnier assisting children paint a mural, discussing the design and subject of the mural at the same time. The subject of the mural is how women lived in the 1960s compared to today. Nancy Pearson briefly talks about her life contrasting the differences in facilities she encountered during life on Keriri Island with life on Weipa before helping present the finished mural to participants.
- children learning how to use a video camera to film island scenery.
- elected Elder Josephine David-Petero talking about progress and its positives and negatives. Josephine's narrative is accompanied by footage of the mural; Josephine in the bus with children; children being taught to create shooting stars from coconut leaves, which were traditionally worn while dancing; island scenery; and children filming with a video camera.
- singing in a traditional language.

Stories under Tagai : workshop process

Unit ID 33034/9

Scope and content

The video begins with Ranger David Baragud sharing a story with children about a traditional practice which was thought to protect fishermen from threats they might tread on while fishing. It involved rubbing a rock formation with your feet before going out and has evolved over time to today where fishermen rub the same rock formation with their hands. David then talks about the importance of storytelling to the community. Visual artist Lauriana Harry then talks about the how much the children enjoyed a story told by Councillor Simeon Walter Mackie. This is followed by footage of children colouring in pictures which were also used in the mural and being interviewed about them. The video finishes with footage of artist Glen Mackie assisting children paint the background for a mural depicting a traditional story unique to Yam Island. The details on the mural were painted by Glen Mackie himself later. The mural was painted on a wall of the museum in the Dawita Cultural Centre.

Stories under Tagai : Easter school holiday family literacy program, 2012

Scope and content

The video begins with Councillor Simeon Mackie helping children sing in a traditional language. Simeon then talks generally about Yam Island. Councillor Simeon Mackie then shares two stories with the children which are reflected in the mural created by the children and artist Glen Mackie during a Culture Love 2012 'Stories under Tagai' activity (refer Item 9).

- the first is the 'Story of Aka Medthre', a woman map maker who after a dispute went to live on the moon.
- the other is about a rock formation which fisherman traditionally rubbed their feet on prior to fishing, which was thought to bring protection from venomous sea creatures that could potentially be trod on etc. Simian comments that this practice was still in place 30-40 years ago when he was a boy.

Footage of children listening, the mural, the rock formation and the island accompany the narrative of the stories.

Unit ID 33034/11

Scope and content

This item contains part 1 of the e-book 'The saga of Kuyam' produced in a workshop during the Culture Love 2012 'Stories under Tagai' program on Mabuiag/Jervis Island. The text was written by Cygnet Repu with linocut illustrations by local artists and the children of Mabuiag. This story is an extract from 'The saga of Kuyam', which was told by the grandfathers: PAAPI, AILUMAY, NOMOA the former chief of Panai and by WARIA the present chief of Panai. In Part One: Two brothers Kang (who was blind) and Thoegay (who was keen sighted) went fishing for a turtle. Kang and Thoegay could make good and bad weather and were very tall. After a long and successful fishing trip to various islands they slept while their crew drank all the water. When they woke they headed back home to Mabuyag (Mabuiag).

This story is an extract from 'The saga of Kuyam', which was told by the grandfathers: PAAPI, AILUMAY, NOMOA the former chief of Panai and by WARIA the present chief of Panai. In Part Two: The hunting party reached Mabuyag (Mabuiag) where Kuyam, their sister's son, asked them to kill the turtle they had caught. The party decided to kill the turtle on a nearby island instead. They were collecting water when they noticed that the water vessels had holes in them. They now knew who had drunk all the water. They returned to the canoe and set sail. Kang and Thoegay killed the crew and then directed the dead men to positions in the sky. Then the two brothers and their sister Kwaka set sail.

This story is an extract from 'The saga of Kuyam', which was told by the grandfathers: PAAPI, AILUMAY, NOMOA the former chief of Panai and by WARIA the present chief of Panai. In Part Three: The brothers caught a bug and sailed to Badu overnight. In the morning the brothers asked their sister Kwaka to fetch water and set sail while she was fetching. They directed Kwaka to become a black bird. They returned an octopus they had caught in the original hunting trip asking it to appear on the surface each day at 9 o'clock. They arrived at the place where they had previously killed the turtle, cooked it and sailed back to Mabuyag (Mabuiag). Kuyam greeted them and noticed parts were missing. Kang and Thoegay realized they had left them where they cooked the turtle and left to get them.

This story is an extract from 'The saga of Kuyam', which was told by the grandfathers: PAAPI, AILUMAY, NOMOA the former chief of Panai and by WARIA the present chief of Panai. In Part Four : On their way back to Mabuyag (Mabuiag) they stopped and Thoegay gathered fruit for them to eat eating many himself in the process. A woman came to the garden to gather fruit and noticed the fruit was all gone and had been eaten. She saw Thoegay and frightened by his size ran away. Thoegay thought he had been discovered by a man and stomped on the ground creating a storm. The woman hid in fear and was then killed by lightning. Thoegay returned to the canoe, the two laughed at what had happened and returned to Mabuyag (Mabuiag). When they returned they taught Kuyam a song. Later Kuyam carved emblems on the turtle shells.

Scope and content

The video begins with Councillor Keith Fell talking about the importance of the Culture Love 'Stories under Tagai' program to the community. It then shows footage of a lino printing workshop where arts worker Charlie Street assists children draw designs, cut these from lino, then print them onto paper. Councillor Keith Fell then talks about how it is natural for the children to love art as the community already creates art from natural objects such as shells. Keith then discusses a night time activity wherein children used an iPad app to help identify star constellations. He comments that this is a good marriage of culture and technology as the Southern Cross and other stars were traditionally used for navigation. He talks about the importance of keeping up with technology and there is brief footage of children learning how to use a video camera.
